

PEEL'S TARIFF OUTDONE!

MESSRS. CROW AND TYRELL beg to call the attention of the Chartist Public to the BEVERAGE prepared by them, as a Cheap and Wholesome substitute for TACKED Coffee. Its nutritive qualities are equalled by none in the Market; while its use of Frothing renders it vastly superior to the Traff offered for Sale by those who regard not the health of the Consumer. As the means of supporting the Executive Committee of the National Association as a measure of discipline, and crippling the Governmental Exchequer, it may be made a ready and powerful weapon in the hands of the Sons of Trial.

A single Trial will prove its superiority over other Preparations like pretensions.

Prepared and Sold by the Proprietors, 81, Belgrave Gate, Leicester.

The Proprietors have great pleasure in announcing that Mr. J. HOBSON, Publisher of the Northern Star, has become sole Agent for the AGENT for the CHARTIST BREAKFAST POWDER, for the District of Yorkshire. He has now a large quantity in Stock, both at Leeds and at Huddersfield, from which he is authorised to supply the Associations and other respectable Vendors at the same Prices as the Proprietors themselves. Orders addressed to him will meet with prompt Attention.

CAUTION TO LADIES.

THE PROPRIETORS OF KEARSLEY'S ORIGINAL WIDOW WELCH'S FEMALE PILLS, find it incumbent upon them to caution the Possessors of these Pills against another person of the name of SMITHERS, and calling herself the Grand-daughter of the late Widow WELCH, who has no right to the preparing of them, the said Widow Welch, acknowledging, that having received from KEARSLEY, of Fleet-street, whose widow found it necessary to make the following affidavit, for the protection of her property, in the year 1798:—

AFFIDAVIT.

First.—That she is in possession of the Recipe for making Welch's Female Pills, which was bequeathed to her late husband.

Second.—That this Recipe was purchased by her from the said late Widow Welch, in the year 1787, or a valuable consideration, and with a view for making the medicine for public sale.

Third.—That she, CATHERINE KEARSLEY, is also in possession of the Receipt signed by the said Widow Welch, acknowledging, that having received the money of the said Mr. GEORGE KEARSLEY, either on the purchase of the absolute property of the said Recipe.

C. KEARSLEY.

Sworn at the Mansion House, London, the 3rd Day of November, 1798, before me, ANDERSON, Mayor.

These Pills, so long and justly celebrated for their efficacy, were strongly recommended to the attention of every Lady, having obtained the sanction and approbation of most Gentlemen of the Medical Profession, as a safe and valuable Medicine, in effectually removing obstructions, and relieving all other inconveniences, to which the Female Frame is liable, especially those which, at an early period of life, frequently arise from want of Exercise and general Debility of the System; they excite an Appetite, and induce regular Stools, without any Nausea, Headache, or are eminently useful in Windy Disturbances, Pains in the Stomach, Shortness of Breath, Palpitations of the Heart; being perfectly innocuous, may be used with safety in all Seasons and Climates.

Sold, wholesale and retail, by J. Sanger, 150, Old-ford-street; and by most respectable Medicine-venders in Town and Country, at 2s. 9d. per box.

N.B. Ask for Kearsley's Welch's Pills; and observe, one are genuine unless C. Kearsley is engraved on the Government Stamp.

KERMAN'S CELEBRATED GOLDEN PACKETS OF SPECIFIC MEDICINES, Under the Sanction and by the Recommendation of Eminent Gentlemen of the Faculty and the Afflicted.

SPECIFIC PILLS for Gout and Rheumatism, Rheumatic Headaches, Lumbago, and Sciatica, Pain in the Head and Face.—ls. 9d. and 4s. 6d. per Box.

PURIFYING APERIENT RESTORATIVE PILLS,

For both sexes. Price ls. 13d. and 2s. 9d. per box. These Pills are highly recommended for Costiveness and Bilious Complaints, Attacks of Fever, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels, Indigestion, Dimness of Sight, Dropsical and Giddiness of the Head, Worms, Gravel, and Principal Complaints, &c.

ANTISCORBUTIC, SCROFULA, AND LEPRO PILLS AND OINTMENT,

For the cure of Cancerous, Scrofulous and Indolent Tumours, and Inveterate Ulcers; Glandular Swellings, Hemorrhoids, Itch, Scalding, Ringworm, Scald Head, White Swellings, Piles, Ulcerated Sores Legs (though of twenty years standing), Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Burns, Scalds, Cruises, Grocers' Itch, and all Cutaneous Diseases; or any of any of his accretions. Agents enumerated:—Pills. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. per package; the Ointment can be had separate, ls. 13d. per Pot.

UNIVERSAL OINTMENT,

Price ls. 13d. per Pot.

These Medicines are composed of Plants which are indigenous to our own Soil, and therefore must be far better adapted to our constitutions than the medicinal Minerals, Foreign Drugs, and Salts, which well they may be compounded. These preparations are important Discoveries made in Medicine, being the most precious of Native Vegetable Concentrated Extracts, extending their Virtue and Excellency through the whole Human Frame.

Read the Pamphlet to be had of each Agent under the MARK.

No pretensions are made that any of these Medicines form a PANACEA for all Diseases; but they are offered as certain Specifics for particular Disorders, and for all Complaints closely allied to them; not pretending to cure morbid humors, as is frequently done by all-sufficient pill proprietors.

The CELEBRATED GOLDEN PACKETS, prepared by the Proprietor, Geo. Kerman, Dispensing Chemist, could be had at his Dispensaries, 25, Wincolmece, and 18, Lowgate, (opposite the Town Hall,) Hull, or any of his accredited Agents enumerated:—For which see small placards on the wall, who have each an Authority (signed by his own hand) for vending the same; or through any respectable Wholesale Dealer, or Apothecary, where the Packets bears his Name, in his own hand thus—"George Kerman," to imitate which is Felony.

The attention of the Public is respectfully requested to the undoubted cases, and the most rigid investigation into their authenticity is courted.—

It is to prove that the medicine was supplied to my wife, I have caused Mr. George Kerman, Hull, to publish this direct relief from, when my medical man had failed to remedy my case; it had become a rheumatic swelling of my knee joint, with pain and stiffness. Publish this in vain a cure, and the cure had recourse to your medicine, and I think it had a more decided influence than even on the former occasion; each dose producing a marked amount of relief, I have not been on attack of some time. King Charles the Third, in his advertisement) by giving my disinterested private opinion of your Specific for Gout and Rheumatism.

JOHN SHOTTON.

Trippet, Wincolmece, Hull, 1841.

You can make the best use of the cure your medicine made of me whilst violently afflicted with an old rheumatic complaint, renewed by taking cold, in whatsoever way you think most calculated to effect your ends and benefit the suffering thousands who have sought in vain a cure, and have not been attacked since, which is now nearly two years.

ALEXANDER GAINGER, grocer.

To Mr. Kerman, Wincolmece, Hull, 1842.

To Mr. George Kerman.—I is with the most sincere thanks I acknowledge the receipt of your wife's case to you in the hope that you will make it as widely known as possible, for the benefit of the poor suffering beings (and your own profit) afflicted with such diseases. Your medicine is a most valuable medicine for that complaint, in favour of which I cannot half say enough.

WM. WATSON, her Husband, Ship Carpenter, Wincolmece, Hull, 1842.

AGENTS.—Leeds—John Heaton, 7, Bridgegate; York—James Smith, 10, Broad Street; Smotherwell—J. B. Smith, Medicine vender, 56, Beckett-street, Burndoufts; Stocks & Co., Medicine venders, &c. &c. Kirkcaldie.

"If you knew how close their unspasmodic feelings boiling to the spot where they have lived, moved, and toiled, to the spot where they play-place of their early days"— "And the father and mother, and the wife and the child would not endure that they should be torn like a tree from their native land, every fibre clasp the soil which nourished it, unwilling to be forced from their mother-earth and transplanted into a foreign soil, where they might wither and die. Richard Robinson is no uncommonly ungrateful nature. How many hard-working farmers, by unequal burdens have been rendered unable to procure bread, though they have yielded up their honest acres to a large family of children upon them; perhaps paralyzed by age, disease, or accident. Alas, the best suffer the worst; the most deserving are the least required. But shall this state of things be permitted to exist? Shall the weary son of toil be persecuted by anxiety and a large family of virtuous be made the victim of law? all human ties be destroyed to tortures, because an austere Government reaps where it has not sown? Must England lie barren, and destroy them and their country a monster ready to Vainly should I endeavour to impart to others the feelings that racked the old farmer's yearning heart, when the time of his departure arrived. Had the old man been told, the plainness of his ancient attire denoting the simplicity of his manners, that he was with soil—his weather-beaten features expressive of integrity and benevolence—his grey locks floating in the wind—he had beheld him dash away a tear from his eye, and he would have said, "I am taking another step along the emotions which rose to suffocate him—he would have acknowledged that it was a piteous sight, and lamented the fatal policy that condemned such a man to unmerited grief. All the rest passed into the present and the future. An idle prodigal passed was the pathway to school—the lovers' walk where he had courted his wife, a neighbouring farm's daughter.
 He spoke not, for his heart almost choked him with its swelling—every beat of his watch made it throb in his ears. He was taking another step?—along the rolling from his hold of a decayed tree upon which he had carved his name when a boy, and with which he could faint at this time have identified himself.
 He looked at the ground he was treading, and he was known object, as though they were friends who were was never more to see. All the way as he went he kept constantly turning to look at the deserted cot, as if he expected it would follow him. But on reaching the cottage it could not follow him, and he turned that turns away to weep. When he reached the last point of view he paused—the rays of the setting sun were peacefully resting like God's blessing on the scene and made his good-bye breath—ble—had given such a look to his countenance that he was never to be seen Our emigrants were shown their ship by a wealthy stock-jobber who was not ashamed to enjoy his lax and false-law luxuries the moment after—may the idea that they were leaving the country for ever be stamped added cast upon them, and Richard constrained himself to answer, but his ineffectual attempt at mirth only made his misery more apparent. "It's plain," he said, "that they are not going to be sailing; but you, upon the (what a horrible thing!) I care for you. Several months to extort money from him by imposition which his unsuspecting nature rendered too successful. His sobbing heart might have been spared these additional throbs;
 but he was not to be pitied. He was a man who had
 The vessel that bore the rural virtues from the land
 made a gallant show and proudly breasted the waves
 though she were invincible to their mightiest assaults.
 They prayed that their inmates might so surmount the trouble and weariness of the voyage as to be able to find a stormy life and arrive safe in the haven of heaven at home. None cheered the disconsolate emigrants, whose hearts sunk as the land receded from their earnest gaze,
 and wither as the waters received them.
 In a dilemma, and with a mind repugnant to
 that they have always been habituated to, how will their sensations be inverted by novel dread and sickness—and after their perilous voyage is past where shall they seek refuge from the oppressions through which they are to pass? Who have been ruined here and are de-promised—? Remember, Americans, that your fathers were strangers in the land, and even for the sake of their memories receive the exiles with hospitality.
 The emigrants were shown their ship by a wealthy
 stock-jobber who was not ashamed to enjoy his lax and
 false-law luxuries the moment after—may the idea that they were leaving the country for ever be stamped
 added cast upon them, and Richard constrained himself to
 answer, but his ineffectual attempt at mirth only made
 his misery more apparent. "It's plain," he said, "that they are not going to be sailing; but you, upon the
 (what a horrible thing!) I care for you. Several months
 to extort money from him by imposition which his unsuspecting nature rendered too successful. His sobbing
 heart might have been spared these additional throbs;
 but he was not to be pitied. He was a man who had
 The vessel that bore the rural virtues from the land
 made a gallant show and proudly breasted the waves
 though she were invincible to their mightiest assaults.
 They prayed that their inmates might so surmount the trouble and weariness of the voyage as to be able to find a stormy life and arrive safe in the haven of heaven at home. None cheered the disconsolate emigrants, whose
 hearts sunk as the land receded from their earnest gaze,
 and wither as the waters received them.
 In a dilemma, and with a mind repugnant to
 that they have always been habituated to, how will
 their sensations be inverted by novel dread and sickness—and after their perilous voyage is past where shall
 they seek refuge from the oppressions through which they are to pass? Who have been ruined here and are de-promised—? Remember, Americans, that your fathers were strangers in the land, and even for the sake of
 their memories receive the exiles with hospitality.
 The emigrants were shown their ship by a wealthy
 stock-jobber who was not ashamed to enjoy his lax and
 false-law luxuries the moment after—may the idea that they were leaving the country for ever be stamped
 added cast upon them, and Richard constrained himself to
 answer, but his ineffectual attempt at mirth only made
 his misery more apparent. "It's plain," he said, "that they are not going to be sailing; but you, upon the
 (what a horrible thing!) I care for you. Several months
 to extort money from him by imposition which his unsuspecting nature rendered too successful. His sobbing
 heart might have been spared these additional throbs;
 but he was not to be pitied. He was a man who had
 The vessel that bore the rural virtues from the land
 made a gallant show and proudly breasted the waves
 though she were invincible to their mightiest assaults.
 They prayed that their inmates might so surmount the trouble and weariness of the voyage as to be able to find a stormy life and arrive safe in the haven of heaven at home. None cheered the disconsolate emigrants, whose
 hearts sunk as the land receded from their earnest gaze,
 and wither as the waters received them.
 In a dilemma, and with a mind repugnant to
 that they have always been habituated to, how will
 their sensations be inverted by novel dread and sickness—and after their perilous voyage is past where shall
 they seek refuge from the oppressions through which they are to pass? Who have been ruined here and are de-promised—? Remember, Americans, that your fathers were strangers in the land, and even for the sake of
 their memories receive the exiles with hospitality.
 The emigrants were shown their ship by a wealthy
 stock-jobber who was not ashamed to enjoy his lax and
 false-law luxuries the moment after—may the idea that they were leaving the country for ever be stamped
 added cast upon them, and Richard constrained himself to
 answer, but his ineffectual attempt at mirth only made
 his misery more apparent. "It's plain," he said, "that they are not going to be sailing; but you, upon the
 (what a horrible thing!) I care for you. Several months
 to extort money from him by imposition which his unsuspecting nature rendered too successful. His sobbing
 heart might have been spared these additional throbs;
 but he was not to be pitied. He was a man who had
 The vessel that bore the rural virtues from the land
 made a gallant show and proudly breasted the waves
 though she were invincible to their mightiest assaults.
 They prayed that their inmates might so surmount the trouble and weariness of the voyage as to be able to find a stormy life and arrive safe in the haven of heaven at home. None cheered the disconsolate emigrants, whose
 hearts sunk as the land receded from their earnest gaze,
 and wither as the waters received them.
 In a dilemma, and with a mind repugnant to
 that they have always been habituated to, how will
 their sensations be inverted by novel dread and sickness—and after their perilous voyage is past where shall
 they seek refuge from the oppressions through which they are to pass? Who have been ruined here and are de-promised—? Remember, Americans, that your fathers were strangers in the land, and even for the sake of
 their memories receive the exiles with hospitality.
 The emigrants were shown their ship by a wealthy
 stock-jobber who was not ashamed to enjoy his lax and
 false-law luxuries the moment after—may the idea that they were leaving the country for ever be stamped
 added cast upon them, and Richard constrained himself to
 answer, but his ineffectual attempt at mirth only made
 his misery more apparent. "It's plain," he said, "that they are not going to be sailing; but you, upon the
 (what a horrible thing!) I care for you. Several months
 to extort money from him by imposition which his unsuspecting nature rendered too successful. His sobbing
 heart might have been spared these additional throbs;
 but he was not to be pitied. He was a man who had
 The vessel that bore the rural virtues from the land
 made a gallant show and proudly breasted the waves
 though she were invincible to their mightiest assaults.
 They prayed that their inmates might so surmount the trouble and weariness of the voyage as to be able to find a stormy life and arrive safe in the haven of heaven at home. None cheered the disconsolate emigrants, whose
 hearts sunk as the land receded from their earnest gaze,
 and wither as the waters received them.
 In a dilemma, and with a mind repugnant to
 that they have always been habituated to, how will
 their sensations be inverted by novel dread and sickness—and after their perilous voyage is past where shall
 they seek refuge from the oppressions through which they are to pass? Who have been ruined here and are de-promised—? Remember, Americans, that your fathers were strangers in the land, and even for the sake of
 their memories receive the exiles with hospitality.
 The emigrants were shown their ship by a wealthy
 stock-jobber who was not ashamed to enjoy his lax and
 false-law luxuries the moment after—may the idea that they were leaving the country for ever be stamped
 added cast upon them, and Richard constrained himself to
 answer, but his ineffectual attempt at mirth only made
 his misery more apparent. "It's plain," he said, "that they are not going to be sailing; but you, upon the
 (what a horrible thing!) I care for you. Several months
 to extort money from him by imposition which his unsuspecting nature rendered too successful. His sobbing
 heart might have been spared these additional throbs;
 but he was not to be pitied. He was a man who had
 The vessel that bore the rural virtues from the land
 made a gallant show and proudly breasted the waves
 though she were invincible to their mightiest assaults.
 They prayed that their inmates might so surmount the trouble and weariness of the voyage as to be able to find a stormy life and arrive safe in the haven of heaven at home. None cheered the disconsolate emigrants, whose
 hearts sunk as the land receded from their earnest gaze,
 and wither as the waters received them.
 In a dilemma, and with a mind repugnant to
 that they have always been habituated to, how will
 their sensations be inverted by novel dread and sickness—and after their perilous voyage is past where shall
 they seek refuge from the oppressions through which they are to pass? Who have been ruined here and are de-promised—? Remember, Americans, that your fathers were strangers in the land, and even for the sake of
 their memories receive the exiles with hospitality.
 The emigrants were shown their ship by a wealthy
 stock-jobber who was not ashamed to enjoy his lax and
 false-law luxuries the moment after—may the idea that they were leaving the country for ever be stamped
 added cast upon them, and Richard constrained himself to
 answer, but his ineffectual attempt at mirth only made
 his misery more apparent. "It's plain," he said, "that they are not going to be sailing; but you, upon the
 (what a horrible thing!) I care for you. Several months
 to extort money from him by imposition which his unsuspecting nature rendered too successful. His sobbing
 heart might have been spared these additional throbs;
 but he was not to be pitied. He was a man who had
 The vessel that bore the rural virtues from the land
 made a gallant show and proudly breasted the waves
 though she were invincible to their mightiest assaults.
 They prayed that their inmates might so surmount the trouble and weariness of the voyage as to be able to find a stormy life and arrive safe in the haven of heaven at home. None cheered the disconsolate emigrants, whose hearts sunk as the land receded from their earnest gaze,

8

Forthcoming Chartist Meetings.

LONDON.—MARYLEBONE.—Mr. Wheeler will lecture at the Working Men's Hall, on Sunday evening.

OLD BAILEY.—On Sunday next, Mr. Bowell, of Bath, will deliver a lecture at 55, Old Bailey, at seven o'clock in the evening.

On Tuesday evening a lecture will be delivered at the same place, at eight o'clock.

On Wednesday evening the Local Chartist Committee will meet at eight o'clock.

THE CITY OF LONDON LOCAL VICTIM FUND COMMITTEE meet every Sunday morning, and Tuesday evening, at 55, Old Bailey.

THE PATENT THEATRE has been taken for the benefit of the political victims, by the Tower Hamlets Chartist, and several excellent pieces will be produced on Wednesday, Oct. 26th.

A GRAND CONCERT, with other amusements, will be held at 55, Old Bailey, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 27. Tickets sixpence each. The lottery will be conducted on the principle of all prizes and no blanks; the proceeds to be devoted to the benefit of the political victims. Many of the articles to be disposed of are of considerable value.

BUCK'S HALL LOCALITY.—A few of the members of the late Buck's Hall locality, intending opening a new locality at the Buck's Hall locality, (Chesham-street, corner of White-street, near the Woodman, Waterloo-town).

BLACK BULL INN, HAMMERSMITH ROAD.—A public meeting will be held on Sunday, Oct. 28, at 10 o'clock, for the purpose of electing a district public meeting, and to take such other steps as may be deemed necessary at this important crisis. All the members residing in this locality are requested to attend punctually.

DEWEES.—Two lectures will be delivered on Monday the 24th, in the Large Room, over the Co-operative Stores, by Messrs. Brook and Bray, of Huddersfield, on the benefits arising from co-operation. Chair to be taken at half-past seven o'clock punctually.

N.B.—Owing to the numerous applications for shares belonging to the Stores, the directors will sit from eight to eleven every Saturday night, to receive contributions. Shares £1 each, taken as low as threepence per week.

DEWEES DISTRICT.—A council meeting will be held on Sunday, Oct. 30th, in the Large Room, over the Stores, at two o'clock in the afternoon; delegates are requested to attend from all parts of the district.

HOLLINGWORTH.—The residents in Hollingworth, Mottram, and the surrounding neighbourhood, are requested to attend at their rooms, on Sunday next, at one o'clock, on business of great importance.

NEWCASTLE.—Mr. H. Robson, will preach Mr. Russell's funeral sermon in the Chartist Hall, Goat Inn, Cloth Market, on Sunday evening, at seven o'clock.

MR. W. CUNNINGHAM will lecture at Almondbury on Saturday, (to-day), at half-past six.

MR. LISTER will visit Thurstall on Sunday, at half-past two o'clock in the afternoon; Holey, Sunday, the 30th; and Yew Green, on Sunday, November the 6th.

MR. EDWARD CLARKE will lecture at Kirkstall on Sunday, at six o'clock; Thurstall, on Sunday, at six o'clock; Thurstall, on Sunday, at six o'clock; Thurstall, on Sunday, at six o'clock.

STOCKPORT.—Mr. James Mitchell will lecture at the Association room, Bamber's Brow, at six o'clock on Sunday evening, Oct. 28th.

NOTICE.—The Evening Star is read daily at the Association room, Bamber's Brow.

THE FRIENDS at Heston Norris are informed that the Northern Star, Evening Star, Chartist Circular, and all other out-let democratic journals, together with the London Times, will be ready every night at the house of Mr. James Mitchell, Heston Norris. This arrangement has been made to accommodate those who live a great distance from the Association room.

BAISTOL.—Mr. F. W. Simson will deliver a lecture on Sunday evening, 11th, in Bear-Lane Chapel, at half-past six.

DEATH OF MR. ORDE OF NUNTKYLL.—We regret to state that this respected gentleman suddenly expired at Morpeth, on Sunday last. Mr. Orde was well known in the sporting world as the proprietor of Tomboy, Bee's-Wing, and other celebrated horses. He was respected for his private virtues, and he was honoured not only in Great Britain but on the continent for a character which few have acquired—an honest and an honest sportsman.

He was at the great fête at Ravensworth, on the previous Wednesday, and promenade a considerable time on the lawn. He appeared in good spirits and conversed freely with all around. Mr. Orde would be upwards of seventy years of age.

METALLIC CORPSES.—A paper was read at the late meeting of the Paris Academy of Sciences, containing the extraordinary proposition from a M. Carnoy, to employ the galvanoplastic process, after embalming, for the purpose of the human body after death. The idea, however extraordinary it may appear, is said not to be new, and that beautiful specimens are to be seen of small animals, birds, insects, &c. which have been thus preserved.

ENGLISH NEWSPAPERS IN CHINA.—An English newspaper has been recently established in Hongkong, called the Wing Kong Gazette. It is intended soon to commence on in the Chinese language. Indeed, the Gazette sometimes contains extracts from the Wing Kong Gazette.

The Chinese are represented as very anxious and persevering in their efforts to learn English, as well as to learn all relating to this country.

THE RURAL POLICE.—At the General Quarter Sessions held on Tuesday at Lewes, fifty-seven petitions from various parts of the county were presented to the magistrates for the abolition of the rural police force. Several of them referred to the inefficiency of the system, and the enormous expense entailed upon the county. The petitioners also urged that the Parish Constables, who were the same as the rural police, were amply sufficient for the protection of the rural district.

RATHER UNCOMMON.—Two females have been committed to the Rutin goal during the present week upon charges somewhat unusual, at least, against the Rutin goal. One of the females, charged on the oath of John Roberts with feloniously firing a pistol at him, at Wrexham, with intent to do him some grievous bodily harm. Also Jane Williams, committed on the oath of Robert Owen, for stealing a mare in the parish of Lantidale, on the 7th instant, the property of the said Robert Owen.

ESCAPE OF A CONVICT.—On the removal of the prisoners from the Town Hall at the close of the sessions on Friday evening, a convict, Wm. Harrison, on whom sentence of transportation for seven years had just been pronounced, contrived to elude the vigilance of his keepers, and make his escape. He was seen, it appears, drew up at the rear of the Town Hall for the purpose of carrying back the prisoners to the borough goal. The custom on such occasions is to have all the prisoners handcuffed. Harrison, when he saw the van, which was carrying his handcuff, and mixing with the crowd which pressed round the prisoners, got clear off. A bystander, who observed his motions, told the circumstance to some who told him that the convict had been seen to mind his own business. The van moved off towards the borough goal, and was not seen until it arrived at the place. Then, on counting the heads, the most interesting of the group was found to be absent without leave. The van was then sent to the borough and county constables scoured the country in all directions. A person answering the description was traced on Saturday to Melton. He was seen in an adjacent field, and was taken to the road without a cap. All efforts for his apprehension as yet have proved unavailing.— Ipswich Express.

CHILD MURDER.—Some sensation has been created at Croydon within the last few days on account of the discovery of the body of a fine male infant in the water closet of a house in the Addiscombe-road, nearly opposite the police-station. It appears that a young woman named Anne Cooper, who was servant to the lady occupying the house, had for some time past appeared in a state of health, but late on Saturday suspicion was entertained that she was in the family way, and she left her place about three weeks ago to go home to her friends, who live at Bromley. On Thursday evening, in consequence of information that she had been seen in the Addiscombe-road, accompanied by Sergeant Prendergast, went to the house in the Addiscombe-road, and there discovered the body in the situation described. Mr. Neville, a medical gentleman called in, and was called in to examine the child, but in consequence of its decomposed state it was impossible to ascertain whether there were any external marks of violence.—Upon the body being opened, however, it was found that the liver was ruptured, and it was ascertained that the child had been born alive. The lady's name was given as Anne Cooper, and it was ascertained that she was a married woman, and that she had a child, and said it was a bad job, and said she did not know how she came to throw it down the privy. The coroner's jury returned a verdict to the effect that the child was found dead with marks of violence upon its person, and that there was not sufficient evidence to satisfy them that the child was born alive; and on Saturday the prisoner was taken before Mr. Reid for examination upon the charge of concealing the birth, when, after a full inquiry into all the circumstances, she was committed to the county goal to take her trial at the spring assizes for that offence.

THE MURDER OF MR. BROOMHEAD.—Evidence has now been obtained which throws strong light on the fate of this gentleman. Our readers will recollect that he left Bristol on his way for Bloemfontein, which he reached on the 1st of October, 1841. He represented the house of Broomhead, sickle and reaping-hook manufacturer, Riggway, near Sheffield. Several days after he left Bristol information was given by a young man of the name of "Fenned down," returned. Only five sovereigns, with some silver, and his watch and some other articles, were found on him. His pockets contained a sum of money between £300 and £400, were missing. Evidence was obtained, and three persons, Eschel Savage and two brothers of the name of Fenn (one of whom gave the report of the finding of the body) were apprehended. The Fenns were sons-in-law of Savage. That Mr. Broomhead had come to an untimely end no doubt was entertained; that he had been murdered was the general belief. The parties were held at the Police Court for the robbery, at the "Mars" Assizes, at Oxford, in 1842. One of the most material witnesses for the prosecution at the time of the trial was a letter, a certificate to that effect was produced, and the bill against the prisoners was sent to the Court. The prisoners were sent to the County Gaol to lead to the supposition that Mr. William Broomhead had been murdered. Of course, on the bill being thrown out, the prisoners were released. On Saturday last, on Monday the men were again remanded till Saturday (this day). The evidence already obtained leaves no doubt as to Mr. Broomhead's fate: that evidence it would be prudent to give in the present state of the proceedings.

CAPTURE OF AN OUTLAW.—INFORMING CONCERNING PLACED.—An individual of the name of Forbes who was outlawed some time ago, and whom we mentioned some weeks since as being suspected of having been the author of the robbery of the "Mars" Assizes, at Oxford, in 1842. He was found the other day by Mr. Maclean. He was found at his father's, in Lymereoch of Dalraddy, parish of Alvie, concealed in a most ingenious manner. A large peat stack, at the end of the house, appeared to be a peat stack, but it was a chamber formed in its centre in which the outlaw had his residence. There was no visible opening, but the means of entrance was a matter of too much importance to be disclosed to the apprehensions of a third party. On Monday the men were again remanded till Saturday (this day). The evidence already obtained leaves no doubt as to Mr. Broomhead's fate: that evidence it would be prudent to give in the present state of the proceedings.

DREADFUL DISASTER AT SEA.—Intelligence of the following disaster, attended, there is some reason to fear, with the loss of the lives of many of the crew, was received from one of the writers of the subject matter, reached this city on Saturday. It appears that the brig Dundonald, of Troon, D.M'Nicol, master, which sailed from this port on Tuesday evening for Troon, laden with ballast, was driven on shore by a heavy gale, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dundonald, we should think that it appears at least somewhat probable, from the fact that the vessel was driven on shore, and that the crew went down.—This is to certify that the schooner Kirby, laden with slates from Duddon, a small vessel on the borders of Lancashire and Cumberland. The only particulars that we have yet learned of the disaster, is that the Dundonald, on the 11th of October, was driven on shore, and was wrecked on the shore of the island of Mull, near the point of the Mull of Galloway. The vessel was driven on shore at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, and her collision with the rocks occurred about three hours after, and about sixteen miles from the Hook. We learn that the night was rather calm, and that the sea was smooth, with a light breeze. While we anxiously await some further intelligence, and in particular the version of the occurrence to be given by the Dund